Jessica Kingsley Publishers. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, The Assessment of Criminal Behaviours of Clients in Secure Settings, Mary McMurren, John Hodge, 'this is a book written and edited by a group of eminent forensic clinical psychologists.it is a model of brevity and clarity, managing to encompass a full appraisal of the subject from the fundamentals of behavioural analysis through the special demands of making assessments in secure surroundings to report writing and appearing as an expert witness.Quoted references appear at the end of each chapter and are distilled so that there are neither too few or too many.a thoughtful section on 'professionals' issues in working in such environments, a topic often overlooked and certainly not dealt with sufficiently in many texts.This is a useful and compact volume. I expect it will become a standard text for forensic psychology courses and I think the editors' hopes that it will find a readership amongst probation officers, social workers, prison personnel and forensic nurses will be realised.As a reasonable priced paperback it should find its way onto the bookshelf of every aspiring forensic psychologist and member of other disciplines who have to work in such settings or write reports. -Criminal Behaviour and Mental Health 'a useful handbook with an impressive number of practical guidelines and examples for assessing some of the key offence groups in the criminal justice system. A commended reference.' -The Howard Journal of Criminal Justice The assessment of criminal behaviours of clients in secure settings poses a number of particular problems; the behaviour in question is neither currently evident, nor can it ethically be elicited. This results in a great reliance on official records and self-report, with the inevitable attendant problems of validity. Notwithstanding this, assessment is used for making critical decisions about a person's liberty and treatment,...
