Excerpt: .there must be a good deal of ado about nothing on the part of the teacher who professes to be working along new lines. The new music teaching aims to make the music work more than anything else an ethical-experience for children, and by this same token it will only be attempted by teachers whose ethical experience has taken such direction as to make this sort of teaming the only expression possible to them. T-he-simple determination to be up-to-date can no more lead one to the new point of view than-the determination to be conservative can keep one from it, providing the train is laid in general experience by one s habitual mode of thought and feel ing. Like all those things that have to do with the subjective life, the new music iteachling is harder to define. harder to put into recipe, harder to popularize than that which involves only fixed methods of procedure, and themarshaling of plain facts. Like all things which touch the inner life, to comprehend its real spirit requires less a change of mind than a change or heart; the new idea cannot be accepted, in its educational application alone, out of its connection or relation with the cognate phases or general experience, it will not be vital in its meaning, unless it has its root further down, or is to extend itself as it grows, in a-many-sided contact wit i life in every phase of which the principles...
